Eric Chwang
“Paid Surrogacy as Less Objectionable Baby-Selling”

Working Papers in Ethics and Moral Psychology is a speaker series conducted under the auspices of the Icahn School of Medicine Bioethics Program. It is a working group where speakers are invited to present well-developed, as yet unpublished work. The focus of the group is interdisciplinary, with an emphasis on topics in ethics, bioethics, neuroethics, and moral psychology. The meetings begin with a brief presentation by the invited speaker and the remaining time is devoted to a discussion of the paper. The speakers will make their papers available in advance of their presentation to those who sign up for the Working Papers mailing list.

Prof. Eric Chwang is the inaugural Henry Rutgers Term Chair in Health, Ethics, and Society at Rutgers University-Camden. He earned his Ph.D. in philosophy from Princeton University and his M.D. from Baylor College of Medicine. Prof. Chwang works mainly in normative and applied ethics, especially bioethics. His current research focus is the role consent plays in medical treatment and research.
