Children’s Environmental Health Center

The Children’s Environmental Health Center (CEHC) conducts groundbreaking research to identify the environmental causes of childhood diseases and translates research findings into solutions that protect children’s health. The Center provides support and guidance to the Department of Preventive Medicine at the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai by supporting promising research initiatives and sustaining programs to educate the next generation of medical students and pediatricians about preventable environmental hazards.

For more information:
Email:  katherine.southwick@mssm.edu
Last Update:  March 13, 2013