Selikoff Centers for Occupational Health

The Mount Sinai Selikoff Centers for Occupational Health are part of the Department of Preventive Medicine of the Icahn School of Medicine. The Centers provide comprehensive occupational medicine diagnostic and treatment services to patients with occupational diseases. In addition, the Centers provide preventive occupational medicine services to patients, unions and employers in the area of coverage. These include primary prevention, through education and industrial hygiene and ergonomic services to prevent workers from contracting occupational disease; secondary prevention, through screening and surveillance examinations for those workers exposed to known toxins at work but who have not developed any signs of Clinical disease or to examine for more severe consequences of occupational disease; and tertiary prevention, through treatment and rehabilitation of injured workers. The Centers offer industrial hygiene, ergonomic and social work services, and a vast array of advocacy services for patients, especially dealing with Workers Compensation claims. The Centers are part of the New York State Department of Health, Occupational Health Clinic Network.
