Project results are expected to contribute to the following expected outcomes: Strengthening the European quantum ecosystem, enabling stakeholders to enhance quantum technologies' applications in academic, industrial, and relevant cases for the EU and ROK. IAMs for miniaturized and outperforming photonic integrated technologies e.g. in terms of performance, power, cost, novel functionality enabling the development of future-proof, scalable, low-power and high-bandwidth devices. |                                  |               |                |

|         | Synopsis             | Proposals are invited against the following topic: HORIZON-CL4-2025-03-HUMAN-17: Specific support for the Virtual Worlds Partnership and the Web 4.0 initiative (CSA) (Virtual Worlds Partnership) The launch of the co-programmed new European Partnership for Virtual Worlds will help develop and promote a thriving industrial and end-user ecosystem in the EU, covering all the aspects of the virtual worlds value chain. It will also actively engage with people and society at large and provide access to a broader range of resources, including funding, expertise and technology. This CSA should be prepared, managed and coordinated by the key stakeholders in this field. Project results are expected to contribute to the following expected outcomes: The delivery of a Strategic Research and Innovation Agenda (SRIA) for Virtual Worlds in Europe, for useful, open, interoperable, inclusive, sustainable and trustworthy virtual worlds systems and applications, ensuring Virtual worlds reflect EU values and principles. The delivery of a Strategic Research and Innovation Agenda (SRIA) for Web 4.0 in Europe leading to an inclusive, trustworthy, interoperable, and human-centric Web 4.0 leveraging open-source commons building blocks enabling new social and sustainability models that respect European values. Established and running European Virtual Worlds Partnership supporting the European Virtual Worlds and Web 4.0 community. A strong and competitive ecosystem, with European companies playing a leading role in the adoption and acceptance, and in the development and deployment of Virtual Worlds technologies. Reinforced links among initiatives in virtual worlds in Horizon Europe, Digital Europe Programme, and other programmes at EU, national and regional levels. Widespread awareness and outreach programmes Increased adoption of virtual worlds that are open, accessible and inclusive, interdisciplinary, safe and |                |               |                |

The following outcomes are expected: Area A: Better and more realistic immersion through multimodal interaction. Project results are expected to contribute to the following expected outcome: Improvement of the multimodal immersion experience combining eXtended Reality with advanced and innovative technologies. Area B: Innovative photonics technologies for projection, sensing and perception in virtual worlds. Project results are expected to contribute to the following expected outcome: Improved performance of microdisplays or sensing devices serving Virtual Worlds by using innovative Optics and Photonics technologies. Proposals are expected to focus on either Area A or Area B. The area should be clearly identified within |                              |               |                |

Special attention will be given to proposals (whether Area A or Area B) including transdisciplinary research in order to deliver and enhance uptake of suitable, accurate, ethical and safe solutions. Proposed applications should aim at increasing awareness, acceptance and adoption of virtual worlds applications across sectors.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                         |               |                |

Seamlessly integrating quantum computing with classical computing systems, including HPC and cloud services (including the EuroHPC Joint Undertaking's supercomputers, and the quantum computers and simulators already integrated into them), and demonstrating practical quantum computing applications by showcasing use cases that combine quantum and classical computing capabilities Advancing the development of standardized software architectures, compilers, and simulators that ensure application portability |                                         |               |                |

|         | and performance across different quantum computing platforms. Demonstration of workflows that effectively combine quantum and classical computing to address complex computational challenges, providing clear examples of the added value of quantum acceleration or showing a quantum advantage. Support for initiatives aimed at training software developers in quantum programming and developing libraries for basic quantum algorithms, including the integration of quantum error correction mechanisms. This topic emphasizes the strategic importance of collaboration between Horizon Europe quantum computing software and hardware projects and the EuroHPC Joint Undertaking's quantum projects, including high-performance computing-quantum middleware, integration, and Quantum Excellence Centres. Successful applicants will be required to closely collaborate and agree on the interfaces for the main layers of the software stack at the beginning of their projects. It is crucial that the projects collaborate from the outset to define open interfaces for the main layers of the software stack. These interfaces should be open for consultation and incorporate input from existing initiatives to ensure they are well aligned with current developments in the field. All interface specifications should be properly documented as they will serve as the foundational basis for the development of different layers and facilitate seamless collaboration across projects. In line with the European Commission's commitment to open access and reuse of software, when possible, all developments under this call should utilize open-source software platforms and be published in open repositories such as GitHub. Additionally, the use of appropriate software licenses, such as those listed as free by the Free Software Foundation and listed as open source by the Open Source Initiative, or under the European Union Public Licence (EUPL), is strongly recommended. Moreover, the beneficiaries will have to ensure open access to other research outputs like data and workflows under the principle 'as open as possible and as closed as necessary' and in accordance with the FAIR (Findable, Accessible, Interoperable, Reusable) data principles. |                     |                                         |               |                |

The type should be clearly identified within the proposal. Type A GenAI4EU: Generative AI for Robotics for industrial automation. Project results are expected to contribute to all the following expected outcomes: Development of advanced foundation models for robotics, fostering increased autonomy and generalization capabilities, thus enabling robots to dynamically learn and comprehend their physical surroundings in real-time, ensuring adaptability and reliability across diverse and complex scenarios. Validation of the model through fine-tuning and downstream application to address industrial automation use-cases Type B Trustworthy and robust generative AI for improved manufacturing. Project results are expected to further advance foundation models and reliable industrial solutions |                                         |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                                  | The Brint Family Translational Research Program (BFTRP) is the Foundation's funding initiative aimed at accelerating preclinical translational research for inherited retinal degenerations (IRD) and dry age-related macular degeneration (dAMD). The program provides funding and strategic guidance to advance novel therapies from the laboratory toward clinical application (e.g., follow-on funding, FDA investigational new drug [IND] filing, clinical trials, etc.). By leveraging expert mentorship in drug development, regulatory strategy, intellectual property, and commercialization engagement, the BFTRP seeks to address the complexities and diversity of these retinal diseases, increasing the number of viable treatment options for the community. |                |               |                |

|         | Deadline Dates (ALL) 22-Oct-2025 Synopsis The tenth Global Alliance for Chronic Diseases funding call will focus on implementation research addressing strategies for strengthening of health systems to improve equity in high quality care and health outcomes and reduce the prevalence and impact of NCDs in low- and middle-income countries and/or in underserved populations experiencing health disparities such as Indigenous populations, in high-income countries. Chronic non-communicable diseases (NCDs) have become the leading cause of mortality, morbidity and disability globally. They have a significant detrimental impact both on the lives of the affected individual as well as their families and societies and undermine any ambition for a nation's economic growth. According to the latest Global Burden of Disease and Injury analysis, the sustained high burden of NCDs suggests that prevention and management together with health system strengthening will continue to be crucial policy priorities in the years to come. Health systems in many countries have not kept pace with the rapid emergence of NCDs, that require costly long-term care and treatment. Resilient, fit for purpose, health systems have an important role to play in the fight against NCDs. The increasing burden of NCDs on healthcare systems has spurred a greater interest in exploring strategies to tackle these conditions including a move from a healthcare system focussed on disease and hospital-based care, to a more holistic model, involving communities and primary care, and aiming to maintain health. The WHO has produced a series of recommendations for strengthening health systems, to improve capacity and services to tackle NCDs, with an eye to understanding how the service improvement will be scaled up system-wide. These include interventions addressing the integration of and access to care, screening, access to medicines and technologies, task shifting and digital health interventions. Applicants to the current funding call are therefore invited to propose appropriately designed and targeted implementation research to support health system transformation and/or strengthening using evidence-based interventions that can be adapted to, and implemented in, LMICs and populations experiencing health disparities to encourage equitable health outcomes and decrease the burden of NCDs. |                                              |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                                                            | The Heart &amp; Stroke Foundation of Canada ("Heart &amp; Stroke") and Brain Canada Foundation ("Brain Canada") are supporting the 2026/27 Postdoctoral Personnel Awards for Women's Heart and/or Brain Health ("WPA-PDF") in committing up to a total of $400,000. The objective of this competition is to increase the number of researchers and clinician-scientists in Canadian universities and research institutions devoted specifically to women's heart and/or brain health and, in so doing, expand research initiatives in this field. Women include cisgender and transgender women, and trans and non-binary people with shared health experiences but who may not identify as women. In the context of this award, heart and/or brain health research encompasses research addressing conditions, including neurological, that affect the cardiovascular and/or cerebrovascular health of people living in Canada. This could include research focused on prevention, treatment, and/or recovery related to heart conditions, stroke, vascular cognitive impairment, and mental health in relation to these conditions. The stipends awarded will be up to $140,000 CAD ($70,000 per year for up to two (2) years) enabling Postdoctoral Fellows and/or Clinical Fellows to pursue their program of research and engage with mentors as part of their training. |                |               |                |

This support helps ensure the training, retention and success of Canada's cardiovascular and cerebrovascular researchers. The objective of the competition is to increase the number of researchers and clinician-scientists in Canadian universities and research institutions devoted specifically to cardiovascular and/or cerebrovascular health. The stipends awarded will enable Postdoctoral Fellows to pursue their program of research and engage with mentors as part of their training. |                   |                |               |                | cardiometabolic diseases, cancers, neurodegenerative or musculoskeletal disorders), have resulted in increasing health care costs and limited procedural capacity in operating rooms and cath labs (catheterisation laboratory). Lack of specialists is also an issue. This delays patient access to health care and increases the need for alternative and more cost-effective forms of care [5]. The shift of inpatient surgeries and treatments to ambulatory surgical centres (ASCs) could potentially provide a solution to the hospital capacity problem as well as reducing hospital acquired complications and providing improved access to healthcare services for patients in rural areas. ASCs are healthcare facilities focused on providing same-day surgical care, including diagnostic and preventative procedures for patients who do not require overnight stays. It is believed that ASCs can transform the outpatient experience for patients by providing them with a more convenient alternative to hospital-based outpatient procedures. ASCs can be operated by private or public healthcare services. Numerous factors influence whether surgical procedures can be carried out within ambulatory surgical centres. The key drivers are changes and further development in clinical practice and medical technology. The action funded under this topic will be focused on ASCs specialised in orthopaedics for knee and hip joint replacement surgery as well as ASCs specialised in cardiology for cardiac ablation procedures and elective rhythmology. All of these procedures are elective and will increase in the next years due to the ageing population, improved diagnostics and extension of medical guidelines. Based on patient selection, these procedures have been proven suitable for ambulatory settings. This is reinforced by the downward trend in length of stay in hospitals for these procedures in recent years. This also reflects developments in medical technology in these procedures over the last years, that have led to more precise, faster, easier, gentler and more patient-specific interventions. Shifting those procedures from hospitals into ASCs can help to relieve inpatient capacities, enabling faster patient access to those surgeries and in the end reducing overall health care costs. It is important to stress that treatment in ASCs requires good patient selection prior to the surgery based on medical classifications - like the American Society of Anaesthesiologists' risk classification for estimating the perioperative risk - and social factors, such as the individual domestic situation of the patient, to make the intervention in ASC successful. Severe and complicated cases will still have to be treated in hospitals. ASCs offer a lot of benefits to the health care system and can address some problems associated with inpatient treatments in hospitals. Studies show that outpatient procedures are safe and can achieve similar or superior functional outcomes compared to inpatient procedures and, for example, the early mobilisation facilitated by outpatient pathway in hip and knee replacement surgeries contributes to faster recovery timelines [1] [2]. Due to the fact that the costly infrastructure of the hospital is not needed, and patients go home the same day after an outpatient procedure, the shift of procedures into the outpatient setting results in significant cost savings (an outpatient total shoulder arthroplasty (TSA) results in a 40% decrease in charges [3] and unicompartmental knee replacement (UKR) saving up to roughly EUR 18 000 [USD 20 500] per patient [4]). Enhanced healthcare resource utilisation and reduced patient waiting times are additional benefits. Additionally, there are also some patient-related benefits of outpatient procedures. It is proven that patients benefit from recovering in familiar home setting, with various technologies to help monitor their recovery and provide them with access to HCPs. This reduces anxiety [1] and leads to earlier mobility, thus a faster recovery time and a quicker return to daily activities. Overall, this enhances patient satisfaction [1] [2]. On top of that, ASCs decrease the risk of nosocomial infections with the reduced exposure to hospitals environment. Effective implementation of ASCs faces multiple hurdles including: reimbursement models: lack of reimbursement and funding procedures, limiting financial incentives to move procedures from in-hospital to ASCs; stakeholder acceptance: non-clinical decision-makers are not fully comfortable with ASC as a part of the solution to the capacity and demand problem; evidence: lack/limitation of safety and quality data measuring performance and outcomes; human resource readiness: HCPs are not trained to perform in ASCs and run them efficiently; digital infrastructure: data privacy hurdles, interoperability, digital exclusions; protocols: lack of standardised care models across different therapies. Limited implementation of patient-centred evidence-based approaches for quicker and improved recoveries - enhanced recovery programmes; patient readiness: patient expectations and previous experiences making them unwilling to accept procedures in ASCs; home recovery and care system: lack of integration of ASCs with the broader healthcare systems. Applicants should envisage the following activities as part of the action funded under this topic: Establish a multistakeholder advisory board leading and advocating for change in national and regional healthcare services. The advisory board will quantify the requirements for establishing ASCs in orthopaedics and cardiology including different financial and resource models, training modules, reimbursement pathways, digital health solutions for patient preparation and post-

These studies will assess the risks, patient medical eligibility complications, and patient outcomes of ASCs in comparison to hospital-based procedures; Generate and share protocols and best practices across multiple centres in same country and beyond borders, including a strategy for contextual adaptation for ASC scalability across Europe; Create a network of selected ASCs, with successful ASCs leading in sharing best practice, protocols, trainings, and efficiency models; Collect real world evidence (RWE) to demonstrate and model the cost-effectiveness of ASCs vs hospital-based procedures. The study should be multicentre and will establish a registry database answering proposed research questions; Develop a shared framework for clinical data interoperability, and combine an interoperable IT technology solution to integrate clinical data collected at multiple stages of the patient journey with the related digital health solutions that are used for patient preparation, post-discharge management and home monitoring. Adequate consideration should be given to relevant ethical and privacy aspects. Provide a sustainability strategy for the maintenance, update, and validation of the project's results beyond the project duration. Applicants should consider learnings and synergies with relevant initiatives at national and European level to maximise the potential impact of the future project. |                                                                    |                                     |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis             | Proposals are being accepted against the following topic: Topic 4: Leveraging Europe's expertise to accelerate cell therapy for type 1 diabetes This topic is part of the 11th Innovative Health Initiative call for proposals. Challenges and Background T1D is an autoimmune disease that destroys insulin-producing pancreatic beta-cells, leading to lifelong insulin dependence. Despite advances in technology, achieving stable blood glucose levels remains challenging, which increases the risk of severe complications, and this in turn impacts negatively on daily life, work productivity, and mental health, and contributes to stress, anxiety, and depression. Beta-cell replacement therapy offers a promising path towards a functional cure, but critical challenges must be addressed, including the need for renewable cell sources, optimised islet preparations, standardised manufacturing protocols, robust monitoring tools, sustainable reimbursement models, and trained healthcare professionals to manage complex treatments. These challenges align with key priorities from the Draghi Report , emphasising harmonised regulatory pathways, early engagement with HTA bodies, standardised manufacturing processes, and patient-centred clinical endpoints. Without urgent action, the full potential of beta-cell therapies will remain unrealised. Key Objectives: 1) Establishing standardised criteria and analytical methods:This objective aims at developing standardised criteria and analytical methodologies to detect, quantify, and characterise unintended bystander cells and impurities in stem cell-derived or beta-cell therapies for T1D. This work is intended to support the field at large by generating reference materials, optimising detection technologies, and defining regulatory-compliant thresholds that can inform future research and development-not to advance a specific product. The focus is on creating translatable, broadly applicable tools and standards that ensure safety, consistency, and quality. Engagement with the European Medicines Agency (EMA) is encouraged to facilitate the regulatory relevance and potential adoption of these methodologies in preclinical and clinical research settings. 2) Enhancing graft survival and immune tolerance:This objective aims at developing immune-modulating strategies that support the long-term survival of beta-cell grafts and promote immune tolerance. This work is intended to generate insights, tools, and models that advance scientific understanding and inform future |                |               |                | therapeutic approaches. Activities will include retrospective analyses of human cadaveric islet transplantation cohorts from different European countries and healthcare systems to support biomarker discovery and predictive modelling. Key biomarkers - such as continuous glucose monitoring (CGM) metrics, C-peptide levels, HbA1c, inflammatory cytokines, immune cell subsets, beta-cell-specific autoantibodies, and gene expression profiles - will be explored to identify indicators of graft survival, immune tolerance, and beta-cell function. In addition, a prospective study may be designed to identify novel biomarkers related to glycaemic variability, immune regulation, insulin independence, beta-cell regeneration, and inflammatory pathways. These efforts are aimed at supporting the development of robust monitoring tools and decision-making frameworks, not at advancing a therapeutic candidate toward clinical use. 3) Advancing manufacturing and quality control: The objective is to establish robust cryopreservation techniques that preserve the viability and functionality of beta-cells post-thaw, with an emphasis on the identification and validation of biomarkers to guide and assess these processes. Building on this, the applicants should aim to develop and optimise scalable, cost-effective manufacturing methodologies and quality control frameworks that support the production of consistent, high-quality beta-cell therapy materials in a research and innovation context. The goal is to generate foundational knowledge, technical standards, and reference systems, not to develop specific commercial products. Additionally, the consortium should work toward establishing standardised criteria for the production and quality control of excipient raw materials used in beta-cell therapy delivery systems, to ensure their stability, safety, and suitability for future clinical applications. 4) Streamlining preclinical and clinical development: This objective aims at enhancing preclinical models for allogeneic cell therapies, ensuring standardised approaches and consistent methodologies in transplantation science and surgery. The focus is on harmonised regulatory approval, defining patient demographics for broader accessibility, and tailoring treatment requirements for personalised care. Establishing definitions for insulin independence, investigating and working toward the regulatory acceptance of clinically meaningful endpoints, such as 'Time in Range (TIR)' and 'Time in Tight Range (TiTR)', and optimising clinical trial design for allogeneic therapies are essential components of the future project. 5) Implementing advanced monitoring and artificial intelligence (AI)-driven predictive tools: Leveraging real-time monitoring technologies like continuous glucose monitoring (CGM) and biosensors to assess transplant success and metabolic function, this objective aims to integrate advanced techniques from various fields, including oncology. Specifically, immune monitoring strategies used in oncology, such as immune checkpoint inhibitors and tumour biomarker profiling, will be explored to enhance the understanding of immune responses in beta-cell transplantation. AI-powered predictive models will personalise treatment plans and optimise immunosuppression regimens. Additionally, non-invasive imaging techniques, such as magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) and positron emission tomography (PET), will track graft survival and immune responses, ensuring better monitoring and management of beta-cell therapies. The action should also reinforce transparency requirements, including model interoperability, data provenance, and traceability of AI decision-making processes. 6) Defining clinically meaningful and patient-centred endpoints using real-world evidence: This objective aims at leveraging real-world data to define clinically meaningful endpoints that capture quality of life and disease burden in T1D. This includes identifying surrogate endpoints to enable clinical trials that demonstrate long-term benefits without requiring extended study durations. Additionally, generating data on the advantages of achieving normoglycemia in individuals already within target glucose ranges will help refine treatment goals and support regulatory decision-making. A small pilot study must be conducted to test these endpoints and gather initial data on their feasibility and impact. 7) Exploring reimbursement models for beta-cell therapies: This objective aims at developing initial cost-effectiveness models that highlight the potential financial and healthcare benefits of beta-cell therapies, focusing on key aspects like reduced complications and improved quality of life. Early-stage collaboration with health technology assessment (HTA) bodies, payers, and policymakers must be sought to help build a foundation for understanding the value of these therapies, laying the groundwork for future integration into healthcare systems across Europe. 8) Integration of cell therapy into diabetes care and collaborative networks: Beta-cell therapies should be integrated into standard diabetes care through specialised training for healthcare providers and the creation of a network of multidisciplinary centres across Europe. Clinical guidelines should be put in place to ensure a smooth transition from current treatments. Additionally, a network of European innovation hubs must be established to foster collaboration, knowledge exchange, and harmonised regulatory approaches, accelerating the development and clinical application of beta-cell therapies. It will also be crucial to collaborate with professional societies to define a clear clinical pathway, ensuring alignment with best practices and

|         | optimising patient outcomes across the region. Additional key considerations: Applicants are expected to consider a sustainability plan for the maintenance, update, and validation of the project's results beyond the project's duration to ensure long-term impact and continual improvements. Applicants are expected to consider the potential regulatory impact of the results and, as relevant, develop a regulatory strategy and interaction plan for generating appropriate evidence as well as engaging with regulators in a timely manner (e.g. national competent authorities, EMA Innovation Task Force, qualification advice). Applicants are expected to ensure transparent and open dissemination of outcomes, including models and tools, to enable their integration and reuse throughout the wider ecosystem. Applicants should give adequate consideration in the ethical standards and data privacy frameworks applicable to the use of personal health data and biobanks. The action funded under this topic is also expected to explore synergies with complementary initiatives to advance research and innovation in Europe, such as NHPIG, which is developing the first T1D autoimmune pig model, the Vanguard-project, the Islet-project, JOIN4ATMP, and relevant Horizon 2020/Europe projects. Furthermore, the project should explore synergies with the European Pancreas and Islet Transplantation Registry (EPITR), an initiative led by the European Pancreas and Islet Transplant Association (EPITA) to establish a pan-European registry collecting data on individuals who have received pancreas or islet transplants. By leveraging their insights and networks, the project aims to strengthen the impact of beta-cell therapy development, ensuring that these collaborations contribute to a more comprehensive and effective approach to tackling T1D through cell-based therapies. |                                                                    |                |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis             | Proposals are being accepted against the following topic: Topic 3: AI-powered signal detection in pharmacovigilance. This topic is part of the 11th Innovative Health Initiative call for proposals. Spontaneous reporting systems (SRSs) have been essential for signal detection in pharmacovigilance but suffer from low accuracy and delays, impacting patient safety. More recently, electronic health records (EHRs) have also been used for signal detection<sup>1</sup>, but the performance needs to be improved [1]. A safety signal is information on a new or known adverse event that may be caused by a medicine and requires further investigation. Signal detection is the identification of potential exposure-outcome relationships that warrant further consideration. AI offers a promising solution by improving the efficiency, accuracy, and timeliness of signal detection using diverse and untapped data sources to allow for enhanced and timely benefit-risk profile evaluation. Recent regulatory developments include the FDA's January 2025 guidance on AI for decision-making (FDA Guidance AI), which provides recommendations for using AI in regulatory decision-making about drug safety and effectiveness. Additionally, the EMA's September 2024 reflection paper (EMA- Reflection paper on AI) discusses AI's role throughout the lifecycle of medicinal products, from drug discovery to post-authorisation. Advances in digital technology and computer science, such as generative AI, machine learning, and predictive analytics, have the potential to enable faster and more accurate analysis of both traditional and emerging data sources, which will improve patient safety, provision of healthcare, and public health. There are different PV areas where AI could potentially be applied, including individual case safety report (ICSR) management, periodic reports, signal detection, and risk management. The scope of this topic focuses on the use of AI for signal detection and risk prediction. It also covers opportunities that may not be 'signal detection' per se but rather augmentations/support beyond signal detection for instance with the expanded use of data and AI-powered methods, including characterisation of cases that can provide context for interpreting an exposure-outcome relationship. The use of AI for ICSR management and processing as well as periodic reports are out of the scope of this topic. To fulfill this aim, |                |               |                |

the action funded under this topic should: 1. Evaluate, select, optimise and test AI algorithms using disparate data sources for signal detection. This implies: carrying out a review of existing literature, including results from previous initiatives. and practical applications. This will help to understand the strengths and limitations of different approaches and identify a collection of systems, AI methods, and tools that have been tested on various data sources; selecting the most effective algorithms for signal detection based on this review; pilot testing the algorithms to evaluate their performance using a series of use cases against different business scenarios from different stakeholders' perspectives. Performance metrics include accuracy, reliability/repeatability, and trustworthiness. The criteria of the use case studies will be developed at an early stage of the project when promising algorithms and tools have been identified; optimising AI algorithms to perform signal detection at the level of a medical concept or syndrome, with emphasis on transparency requirements, including model interpretability, data provenance, and traceability of AI decision-making processes. 2. Evaluate diverse data sources to be considered within a cohesive pharmacovigilance network for the purpose of signal detection. This implies: identifying data sources and reference datasets needed to pilot test the algorithms. This will include EHRs (medical records, claims, registries) as one of the main data sources in this project and other data sources such as spontaneous reporting systems (EudraVigilance, FDA Adverse Events Reporting System FAERS and WHO Vigibase), social media and genomics; evaluating these data sources addressing their overall quality, how fit they are for purpose, current limitations and future opportunities, such as electronic health records, social media platforms, and others. This includes evaluating them individually or simultaneously to ensure a holistic view of drug safety, enhancing the analysis and monitoring of adverse drug reactions for a more thorough understanding of drug safety; developing a set of recommendations that could be utilised for simultaneous analyses of different data sources, along with the principles to be followed to support a common data model for evaluating different data sources for the same purpose. 3. Evaluate and develop predictive models to identify risks in the future (risk prediction). based on the results from signal detection, develop predictive models using different data sources that may help identify potential risks in the future before they escalate into significant public health issues. These models would use historical data and advanced analytics to forecast potential risks, potentially enabling proactive measures to mitigate risks. 4. Develop a recommendations document for

|         | implementing AI-powered signal detection and risk prediction systems in real-world scenarios using the results from the pilot tests, design a recommendations document which will serve as a reference for implementing AI-powered signal detection and risk prediction systems in real-world scenarios. The recommendations will include a set of principles and practical considerations to enable effective, explainable, and trusted use of AI and will include ethical, legal, and governance considerations for the sharing and use of real-world data and AI-algorithms; engage with the European Medicines Agency (EMA) to seek endorsement of the recommendations document via the "Qualification Procedure". 5. Develop recommendations for human-in-the-loop (HITL) and human-on-the-loop (HOTL) AI in pharmacovigilance signal detection for optimal performance and oversight. 6. Develop templates and tools for practical implementation, including integration into existing PV systems of AI - power signal detection and risk prediction models by different stakeholders. 7. Develop training plans and education materials to disseminate the recommendations widely to the stakeholder community and develop a strategy for uptake. For all these activities, applicants are expected to adhere to ethical and legal principles. For instance for trustworthy AI, human oversight and verifications will follow regulatory frameworks such as the Assessment List for Trustworthy Artificial Intelligence (ALTAI). Applicants are expected to develop a regulatory strategy and interaction plan for evidence generation to support the regulatory qualification of the methodology as relevant and engage with regulators in a timely manner (e.g. national competent authorities, EMA Innovation Task Force, qualification advice). Applicants are also expected to foster proactive and early involvement of regional healthcare systems and health authorities in all stages of the discussion and decision-making processes. |                                       |                                     |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis             | Proposals are being accepted against the following topic: Topic 2: Understanding how infections foster and induce non- communicable diseases This topic is part of the 11th Innovative Health Initiative call for proposals. Scope: Infectious agent (IA) and non-communicable disease (NCD) interplay has driven effective prevention strategies. However, a growing field of research suggests that there are many unexplored connections between IAs and NCDs that could be utilised to develop better diagnostic, preventative, and therapeutic approaches to burdensome diseases. A cohort analysis identified 96 distinct NCDs correlated to IAs [1]. Other cohort analyses identified neurodegenerative diseases, defined as the progressive loss of neurons resulting in loss of motor function or cognition, with links to viral infection [2], including Alzheimer's disease, amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, dementia, vascular dementia, Parkinson's disease and multiple sclerosis. IA links to cardio-metabolic NCDs such as HSV (Herpes simplex viruses) and coronary artery disease [3], CMV (cytomegalovirus), EBV (Epstein-Barr virus), VZV (varicella-zoster virus), influenza and parvovirus B19 have been shown to induce cardiomyopathies [4], and H. pylori infections may drive myocardial infarction [5]. While cancer, autoimmune, neurological, and cardiometabolic NCDs all have significant links to IAs, the scope of this topic is focused on neurodegenerative and cardiometabolic diseases, which carry significant disease burdens, potentially caused by direct, immune-mediated, or microbiota-gut-brain-axis damage/dysregulation, and lack early intervention strategies. Via the action funded under this topic, Europe's research community could potentially find more infection-based approaches for diagnosing, preventing, and treating NCDs. The action funded under this topic aims to identify potential causal links and biomarkers leading to mechanism of action (MoA) studies. The literature [6][7][8] demonstrates research cohorts' utility in exploring the interplay between IAs and NCDs, increasing the likelihood of success. For instance, causative links were determined for oncolytic viruses, EBV [9] and human papillomavirus (HPV) [10], using Hill's causation criteria. under this topic should: develop methodologies to demonstrate non-carcinogenic IA to NCD causal relationships; consolidate data in one repository of IA/NCD causal relationships, biomarkers, and MoA Applicants are expected to define a strategy to assess non-carcinogenic infection-associated NCD causative links and related biomarkers, incorporating a modelling perspective alongside AI-assisted data mining, appropriate statistical methodologies, and prioritisation approaches for the exploration of mechanisms of action (MoA). Applicants should also detail their methodological approach and data collection procedures, providing preliminary data to show potential for success and strategies for mitigating main methodological risks and limitations. As part of the first objective of proposed activities, applicants should work toward generating robust evidence toward proof of causality rather than only strengthening the known associations of IAs and NCDs. Applicants should take advantage of the available research cohorts, biobanks, and exposome data, including microbiota-gut-brain-axis samples from large general population studies, neurodegenerative disease cohorts, or cardiovascular disease cohorts. Association strength, consistency, and specificity should be indicated by similarity of measurement across different cohorts. Insurance data could be used to analyse temporality where infection occurs prior to medically attended disease. Cohorts from patients that have received transplants or immunosuppressive treatments with longitudinal data could demonstrate temporality and biological gradient effects from opportunistic infections, the strength of the immune response to IAs to demonstrate elements of causality driven by immune-mediated damage. Selection of research cohorts should prioritise data sets with populations from diverse ethnicities, socio-economic statuses, and balanced for gender. Applicants should develop/use pre-clinical models for causal link plausibility verification. Applicants are expected to follow and comply with all relevant ethical and data privacy standards for research. Applicants are also expected to conduct their consortium work with full transparency, clearly communicating data provenance, model interpretability, traceability, and limitations, especially when using AI modelling and decision-making. The second objective is identifying novel biomarkers, ideally to classify associated IAs, to better stratify individuals (children, adults, the elderly) who are at risk of developing NCDs post infection. This could be done using immune or metabolic markers, host and microbiome metabolomics, sequencing, etc. This pillar can utilise the same cohorts, biobanks, and exposome data used for pillar 1 if sufficient, but should supplement with additional cohorts where needed. |         | timeframe of the project, the launch of new prospective cohorts is out of scope but limited recruitment to fill specific data gaps in existing cohorts could be considered. The third objective is to define the MoA that IAs use to drive NCD development. MoA identification would require tissue samples from pillars 1 &amp; 2, as well as pre-clinical or in silico experimentation according to the targeted conditions or diseases. No product development is expected from this action in the proposed timeline. Applicants are expected to consider the potential regulatory impact of the results and, as relevant, develop a regulatory strategy and interaction plan for generating appropriate evidence as well as engaging with regulators in a timely manner. Additionally, applicants should anticipate engaging regional healthcare systems and authorities to prepare for clinical implementation and outcome acceptance when necessary. Applicants should include in their proposal a strategy to ensure sustainability of the outputs of the project beyond the funding period. The funded project should explore synergies with the funded project from IHI Call 11 Topic 'Towards precision medicine: platform for transdiagnostic stratification of brain dysfunction' (once the funded projects are awarded) to increase impact. Applicants are also expected to consider synergies with other relevant global, European and national initiatives including projects generated from Cluster Health topic "Relationship between infections and non-communicable diseases (HORIZON-HLTH-2023-DISEASE-03-07). |                                                                    |                                     |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis      | Proposals are being accepted against the following topic: Topic 1: Towards precision medicine: platform for transdiagnostic stratification of brain dysfunction This topic is part of the 11th Innovative Health Initiative call for proposals. Current diagnosis and patient stratification in health disorders with Central Nervous System (CNS)-driven symptoms are based on DSM-5 / ICD-11 codes, which are not aligned with underlying biological processes and mechanisms. Subsequent suboptimal disease classification and patient stratification is a key reason for the low PoS of clinical development and the historical lack of new and more efficacious treatments. This topic aims to address these challenges by adopting a holistic, transdiagnostic approach [3] focused on the common underlying biology of RM&amp;I symptom domains across the relevant disorders listed in the first expected outcome. The topic seeks to build on an existing federated data platform to consolidate, curate, link and analyse robust, multimodal datasets from relevant patient populations. Thus, activities related to building a new platform or a biorepository from scratch are out of scope. The data platform must enable data/sample discovery, access, and support advanced computational analysis including artificial intelligence (AI)/ machine learning (ML) technologies while ensuring interoperability with other global data platforms to illuminate the biological basis of the RM&amp;I symptom domains and identify related candidate markers and endpoints. The hypotheses will be prospectively tested in clinical case studies focusing on but not limited to AD, MDD, and obesity. Post-project, the platform will be available as open access for ongoing research and validation. The topic also priorities collaboration with relevant stakeholders, including people with lived experience (LE), carers, HCPs, providers, regulators, HTA bodies and payers, to prepare the healthcare system for this transformative shift. People with LE can provide unique insights and expertise that comes as the result of first-hand experience of health challenges. Integrating LE expertise improves research by bringing an understanding beyond academic and clinical knowledge. The perspectives of people with LE across the relevant symptom domains must be represented within the consortium and applied wherever appropriate. Applicants must outline their approach to inclusive and equitable practices throughout the initiative, possibly through a risk register and appropriate mitigations. Example areas for consideration include data representation, bias mitigation, stakeholder engagement, ethics, and feedback mechanisms. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                                               | The U.S.-Mexico Commission for Educational Exchange (COMEXUS), the Fulbright Commission in Mexico, is interested in supporting fieldwork and research in areas of relevance to U.S.-Mexican relations, including but not limited to: economic integration, foreign policy, society and politics, science and technology, public health, law, security, trade, migration and border issues. COMEXUS is particularly interested in proposals in STEM fields. COMEXUS also supports projects in the arts (both performance and research) that create and enhance the dialogue between the U.S. and Mexican arts communities. COMEXUS encourages applications from master's- and doctoral-level candidates seeking to do thesis or dissertation research. Applications will be accepted in all fields of study, except medicine, veterinary medicine and dentistry. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                | The Christianson Fellowship supports self-arranged and created service project experiences abroad. Past fellows' projects have focused on multiple international issues, including public health, environmental conservation, legal advocacy, women's and girls' rights, microfinance, education, and poverty alleviation, among other topics. A project should focus on an issue and a region of the world that the fellow feels passionately about. The Christianson Fellowship is intended to cover living expenses while abroad and contributing to a service project. This includes housing, meals, and local transport. This may also include associated costs, such as transport to and from a project location, passport and visa costs, and travel medical insurance. The Fellowship does not cover mid-service trips home. The volunteer project must be outside of the U.S. and conducted in-person at the host location. To date, Christianson Fellows have worked in more than 40 countries around the world. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                           | The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation (RWJF) has issued a call for proposals (CFP), Exploring Equitable Futures, to support projects that seed new and unconventional ideas that could radically advance health equity for generations to come. RWJF aims to fund projects that: Explore the future by researching and experimenting with ideas that are ahead of the curve or at the edge of our collective imagination; Shine a light on the emerging trends and forces that are shaping our future for better or worse-and suggest ways to navigate them to mitigate harm and advance health equity; Dream big and challenge conventional wisdom to surface possibilities and uncover new paths to dismantle structural racism and build a more equitable future. |                |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis                           | Implementation Programs are designed to advance or scale projects ready for implementation or commercialization and advance KBHN's mandate to make a difference in the lives of children and youth with neurodevelopmental disabilities and their families across Canada. The Implementation Program will support large-scale Implementation Projects positioned to bridge the gap between scientific innovation to uptake on a national scale. Successful projects are expected to achieve measurable advances in social solutions, changes to practice or policy, digital or biomedical innovations, or new commercial products that contribute to improving the quality of life for children with neurodevelopmental disabilities and their families. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                          | The GSK IMPACT Awards provide funding, training and development for charities doing excellent work to improve people's health and wellbeing. Now in their 29th year, they are open to registered charities that are at least three years' old, working in a health-related field in the UK. The GSK IMPACT Awards are judged by a prestigious panel of judges and provide national recognition for the winning charities. Up to 15 awards will be made, ranging from £4,000 to £50,000. In addition, the training and development is valued at a further £13,500. Organisations will also receive help with press and publicity, be given a set of promotional materials and receive pro bono offers from GSK. |                |                              |                |

|         | Synopsis                                             | The Edna G. Kynett Memorial Foundation currently accepts proposals in any of three broad areas: community health, professional education and research. The Board encourages proposals designed to improve the cardiac health and wellness of populations that have a higher-than-average risk of heart disease and are generally underserved by our current health system. Innovative approaches that may offer a significant return on investment and a focus on prevention are also priorities, as are those that can demonstrate efficacy and sustainability.                                                                                                                                                  |                |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis                                             | The Scholar award supports rising stars in the blood cancer research field. The scholar must be a highly qualified investigator who has shown a capacity for independent, sustained, and original investigation in the field of hematologic malignancies and/or relevant pre-malignant conditions. The scholar should hold an independent, tenure-track faculty-level position, below the level of full professor, and must have substantial research support awarded from a national agency. Scholar applicants are primarily basic and translational researchers; those who are primarily clinical researchers should consider the Scholar in Clinical Research subcategory. |         | Synopsis                                             | The Leukemia & Lymphoma Society supports talented blood cancer researchers in the early phase of their careers through the Career Development Program. CDP continues to provide a pool of dedicated researchers to advance the understanding and diagnosis of blood cancer, as well as the development of treatment and prevention options that will ultimately lead to a higher quality of life for blood cancer patients. CDP provides salary support to assist the awardee pursuing their research program. |                |                           |                |

The sponsor is looking for applications that propose novel approaches to the prevention, diagnosis, or treatment of hematological malignancies and related pre-malignant conditions. Proposals should be based on molecular, cellular, or integrated systems findings and be conceptually innovative and with a clear plan for the eventual clinical translation of the studies proposed and the results expected.                                                         |                |                           |                |

|         |                                    | working on primarily blood cancer model systems rather than blood cancer patients are not eligible for the Scholar in Clinical Research Award and should consider applying for the Scholar Award instead. The Scholar in Clinical Research application and review process has fundamentally changed from project-based to research program-based and therefore, the application is unlike a standard research grant. This award is for 5 years and the maximum award per year is $125,000.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                           | The purpose of the Lundbeck Foundation Start-Up programme is to support the development of Danish neuroscience by facilitating the process for recruiting researchers to Danish Universities or hospitals from abroad or from industry. The Lundbeck Foundation has a strategic goal to make Denmark a frontrunner in the field of neuroscience by funding Danish-based research that promotes a better understanding of the brain and better prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of brain disorders. At the same time, the grants must help to ensure that Denmark has the best graduates and scientists at all career levels in the fields of biomedical, clinical and health sciences in Denmark. Lundbeck Foundation believes that diversity strengthens science and for this reason diversity, including, but not limited to, gender and ethnic origin, is encouraged. It is therefore important that we receive applications for recruitment from all backgrounds. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                 | The Career Development Award will support two-year $100,000 grants ($50,000 per year) in basic, translational, or clinical research studying any discipline involved in Marfan syndrome, Loeys-Dietz syndrome, Vascular Ehlers-Danlos syndrome, and other related conditions. This grant program is designed to support investigators early in their career to derive preliminary data in a key concept area that has high potential to lead to extended funding from NIH, EU, and other large research funding sources. |                |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis                                                          | The one-year Adult Reconstructive Surgery Fellowship at Mayo Clinic's campus in Phoenix/Scottsdale, Arizona, provides extensive exposure to, and experience in, the evaluation and management of complex hip and knee problems in adolescents and adults. The fellowship consists of four, three-month rotations in which fellows work one-on-one with faculty. Fellows perform preoperative consultations, participate actively in surgical procedures and are directly involved in postoperative patient management. Additionally, fellows are active in educational conferences and the development of research projects leading to presentation and publication. |                |               |                |

| Synopsis             | The Mayo Clinic in Rochester offers 12 non-designated preliminary surgery positions at the PGY-1 level each year. This residency offers a wide variety of surgical experiences to residents who have not yet chosen a surgical subspecialty. The program provides one year of general surgery training before residents go on to the military, public health or other professional interest. |

Projects must: focus on a mechanistic hypothesis include an experimental intervention or challenge in humans Applicants must be based at an eligible research organisation. Applicants who are taking the next step towards becoming an independent researcher may be eligible to apply as a 'new investigator'. There is no limit to the amount of funding that can be applied for or the length of the project. MRC will fund 80% of your project's full economic cost. |                |               |                |

This will include new ways to address risk factors and to detect, diagnose and treat chronic and complex diseases early, by supporting projects that: - identify and prioritise research that will most benefit patients and their families - assess the effectiveness of drugs and interventions, in order to improve the evidence base on the cost-effectiveness and comparative effectiveness of health care and strategies - support the development and implementation of strategies and approaches for promoting the health of pregnant women, mothers, and young children, particularly in vulnerable populations; and strategies and approaches for early detection and early intervention in at- risk individuals - support the development and implementation of strategies and approaches for promoting health and wellbeing and adopting healthy lifestyles, and for early diagnosis and treatment, at key life course stages: childhood, adolescence, mid-life, and amongst older people. This grant opportunity is the third under the $77.5 million Targeted Translation Research Accelerator Research Plan, which was developed by an independent Expert Advisory Panel in July 2023. This investment builds on the $47 million Targeted Translation Research Accelerator Diabetes and Cardiovascular Disease program. The objectives and intended outcomes of this grant opportunity are aligned with the following Australian Medical Research and Innovation |                |                           |                |

This will include new ways to address risk factors and to detect, diagnose and treat chronic and complex diseases early, by supporting projects that: - identify and prioritise research that will most benefit patients and their families - assess the effectiveness of drugs and interventions, in order to improve the evidence base on the cost-effectiveness and comparative effectiveness of health care and strategies - support the development and implementation of strategies and approaches for promoting the health of pregnant women, mothers, and young children, particularly in vulnerable populations; and strategies and approaches for early detection and early intervention in at- risk individuals - support the development and implementation of strategies and approaches for promoting health and wellbeing and adopting healthy lifestyles, and for early diagnosis and treatment, at key life course stages: childhood, adolescence, mid-life, and amongst older people. This grant opportunity is the third under the $77.5 million Targeted Translation Research Accelerator Research Plan, which was developed by an independent Expert Advisory Panel in July 2023. This investment builds on the $47 million Targeted |                |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis                                  | Each year, Niekro Aneurysm and AVM Foundation grants funds for research projects targeting aneurysm, AVM or stroke research. These grants enable investigators (MDs, DOs or MD-PhDs) to conduct pilot projects that address a specific hypothesis and generate preliminary data in preparation for major grant applications to corporations, foundations and governmental agencies. Texas applicants will receive priority. |                |                              |                  |

|         | Synopsis                                                              | The Innovation Impact Grant (IIG) program supports the purchase of shared-use research equipment for core facilities at academic or nonprofit institutions that foster innovation within North Carolina's life sciences ecosystem. Priority will be given to proposals that will have a high impact at the applicant institution and the broader life sciences research community. Applicants must be employed as a permanent, full-time core facility director or faculty member at a North Carolina academic or nonprofit research institute. Up to $150,000 may be requested, and a cash match is required.                          |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                    | These awards will help pioneer and accelerate novel drug development for the treatment of Parkinson's, providing researchers the opportunity to generate the essential data and help bridge the gaps needed to get their projects/compounds ready to enter full scale drug discovery with an industry partner or the Parkinson's Virtual Biotech. Parkinson's UK is looking for projects that will have a clear focus on translational drug development to make a difference to those affected by Parkinson's. |                |                              |                  |

|         | Synopsis                                             | Travel Grants are available to help with the costs of travel for research in a health-related field. This may include travel to scientific meetings, visits to research centres or travel for training or short-term work in laboratories. Travel Grants currently have an upper limit of $3,000, although the majority of awards are grants-in-aid. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                                        | Pfizer and the American College of Emergency Physicians (ACEP) are collaborating to offer a new grant opportunity seeking proposals for quality improvement initiatives that will promote the safe management of patients diagnosed with migraine in the emergency department setting. The sponsors seek to support projects focused on clinical program development that overcome barriers to safe, evidence-based management, disposition, and follow up of this patient population. Funded projects will describe the proposed clinical initiative's efficacy with outcome measures that demonstrate improved management of migraine patients, patient safety, physician satisfaction, and/or patient satisfaction. Individual projects requesting up to $200,000 USD will be considered. |                |               |                |

|         | Synopsis                                                     | The Innovating in Health and Wellbeing Challenge aims to support the development and implementation of effective, scalable and sustainable solutions that address complex health and wellbeing challenges in Ireland. It will do so by: Fostering collaboration between researchers, stakeholders, and beneficiaries of research in the health and wellbeing ecosystem; Incentivising the convergence of knowledge, practice, and methods from multiple disciplines and sectors across the system; Facilitating the generation of new knowledge and innovative approaches relevant for health and wellbeing challenges. Funding will be available for collaborative research teams based in eligible research bodies in Ireland. Successful teams will be awarded up to €250,000 and will work through a series of phases to develop their idea. An overall prize award of €1 million will be available to the team that demonstrates the highest potential for transformative impact. The prize will enable the winning team to continue development and explore deployment of their solution. |                |               |                |

|         | Deadline Dates (ALL) 01-Oct-2025 Synopsis Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Honor Society is the international honor society of science and engineering. The Sigma Xi Grants in Aid of Research (GIAR) program has provided undergraduate and graduate students with valuable educational experiences. By encouraging close working relationships between students and mentors, the program promotes scientific excellence and achievement through hands-on learning. Undergraduate and graduate students and students in the health professions currently enrolled in degree seeking programs may apply.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                   |                |                              |                  |

We are interested in idea-generating research that focuses on basic principles of ecological and evolutionary dynamics, especially their interface, and that may be overlooked or too risky for other funding organizations. The Simons Foundation will prioritize cross-disciplinary collaborations that integrate levels of scale, for example from genes to species to communities, from local to global processes or across ecological and evolutionary time scales. They are particularly interested in projects that cut across boundaries, whether these boundaries entail fields and subfields, diverse methodological approaches and/or the geographical regions from which investigators work. |                   |                |                              |                  |

This comprehensive approach aims to generate not only effective maternal smoking cessation interventions, but also robust epidemiological data that can support open access repositories to better inform maternal and fetal health pregnancy outcomes for these vulnerable communities.  |                                                                                                            |                                          |                |                           |                |

|         | Synopsis             | Zoos Victoria invites members of the scientific community to propose future research projects that align with its priority research themes. Zoos Victoria welcomes collaborative research proposals. These could involve the use of Zoos Victoria resources, active collaboration with Zoos Victoria staff or independent research at one of Zoos Victoria's four zoos: Healesville Sanctuary, Kyabram Fauna Park, Melbourne Zoo and Werribee Open Range Zoo. |                |               |                |
