Program Description: The NYS DOH Occupational Health Clinic Network is offering a two-day conference/symposium including lectures and hands-on workshops. The diverse professional staff of the Occupational Health Clinic Network has designed the didactic portion of the conference to alert physicians and clinicians to workplace-related threats to their patients’ health that otherwise might not be evident to them.

The lectures and workshops include general management and analysis of work-related injuries and casualties, and the diagnosis and treatment of primary metal exposure, upper respiratory diseases, musculoskeletal injuries (including repetitive motion injuries) and challenges to mental health including sources of acute work-related stress.

Participation will enable physicians to improve their diagnostic protocols and facilities and fine-tune their interactions with patients. Physicians will leave the conference with an action plan and clinical tools including information packets, standardized questionnaires, forms, protocols and additional materials. Finally, they will have interaction with the faculty and professionals and non-professionals from business, labor, patients as well as physicians actively treating compensable work-related disease.
